About ISLA

The ISLA project has been established by five European partners to encourage sustainable social and economic development on small islands on the periphery of north west Europe.

Islands have particular characteristics and qualities which set them apart from other places but also affect their ability for sustainable conservation and development. The fact that island-settings are unique and that the harmonisation of environmental legislation, agricultural reform and economic development can have serious consequences for islands requires European recognition.

Through the ISLA projects, Bere Island (Ireland), Shetland Islands (Scotland - UK), Argyll and Bute (Scotland - UK), Tiengemeten (The Netherlands) and Kemenez and Ouessant (France) are working together for a sustainable future.
