The Short Life Working Group considered the possibility of looking at the outcomes set out in the Single Outcome Agreement and agreed to look at how best to “island proof” these without the need for a separate plan but to ensure island issues were addressed within the delivery plans.

The Group participated in a discussion regarding the purpose of this Short Life Working Group and how important it is that the Group achieves the goals which it sets out.

Charles Reppke advised that the Group could look at creating an overall objective which the Council would deliver but additionally look at smaller scale objectives which the Short Life Working Group could make happen themselves or by influencing other people in order for change to occur. The Short Life Working Group agreed that this was a good approach so people can see that the Group is actively trying to make a difference as opposed to just discussion on how they could make a difference.

Fergus Murray advised that there is ongoing work that is being done to support the Islands however this needed to be communicated more effectively.

The Short Life Working Group agreed that it would be helpful to look at island success stories and identify why they are successful and then see if the causes of the success can be applied elsewhere. The Group noted that although it may seem that some Islands may appear to be a success, this might not be the underlying case and it is important to try and address any problems that they may be facing.

Decision

The Short Life Working Group agreed to identify clear objectives as to what the Group wants to achieve and release further communication to the public once this has been identified.

7. OUR ISLANDS: ISSUES

Audrey Martin presented the matrix that she had been working on to the Group and explained that the aim of the matrix is to identify overarching Island issues and key issues that are specific to certain Islands. Audrey advised that she had received data which had been gathered during the Community Planning Partnership consultation events that had recently taken place. Audrey reported that Chris Carr had advised that it would be possible to break down the population statistics into demographics in order to try and help identify issues that the Islands are facing and the reasons as to why they are facing these issues. The Short Life Working Group agreed that the demographics of an Islands population would be an important consideration and a discussion was held on this.

The Short Life Working Group undertook a discussion on how ferry reliability was affecting the Islands and how in some instances this was deterring people from living on the Island as it was having a negative impact on their ability to undertake work on the mainland. The Group noted that the matrix contains information regarding Ferry Costs, Capacity and links to other methods of transport however requested that an additional column headed Ferry Reliability be added.

Working Group to discuss which would then form the basis of a future report to Council with recommendations for approval

Decision

Islands Task Force meet with Minister for Local Government

Argyll and Bute Council's Islands Task Force had an extremely positive meeting with the Minister for Local Government, Derek Mackay MSP, in Rothesay on Tuesday 20 May to discuss the future of our islands.

Mr Mackay revealed that the Scottish Government will be producing a prospectus for all of Scotland's islands by the end of June which will provide a toolbox that communities can draw on that is right for their island's circumstances.

He said: "I was grateful to attend discussions in Bute with the council leadership and the islands task force.

"It is important to get this input into decision-making directly from island communities to complement and inform the ground-breaking work of the Island Areas Ministerial Working Group.

"The First Minister's Lerwick Declaration last July affirmed our commitment to subsidiarity and local decision-making.

"Our hard work with islands partners towards an islands prospectus this summer demonstrates this commitment."

Leader of the Council, Councillor Dick Walsh, said of the meeting: "It was a very positive meeting - the needs of our islands are being considered at national government level.

"We are working to bring focus to the particular challenges of Argyll's islands

"Bute is the first island the minister has visited to gather information to help develop the government's island prospectus, which is very pleasing for us.

"This is good news - any change in legislation at national level will reflect the needs of Argyll's islands."

The task force has considered a number of overarching issues facing our islands that require early action including: digital connectivity; economic development; local responsibility for local resources; marketing and promotion; development of community renewables projects; healthcare provision; grid connection; transport links and access to public services

These broad general themes have formed a benchmark from which the council is developing an issues framework to inform future discussions.

These discussions will look to drill down in to the issues, identifying concerns for our islands as a whole, as well as particular issues for individual islands.

Chair of the task force, Bute-based Councillor Len Scoullar, said: “The key to developing a successful future for our islands is not just to understand what the problems are but to have a full appreciation of what is driving these particular problems

“Population decline is an issue across Argyll and Bute, both on the mainland and on the islands and arresting that decline is the key focus of our Single Outcome Agreement (SOA), which seeks to grow our population through economic success. In these coming months we will be looking to ‘island proof’ the SOA and focus on the attractions of our islands.”

The task force will be working with key partners such the Scottish Islands Federation (SIF), NHS Highland and Highlands and Islands Enterprise (HIE) to explore the key issues affecting our island communities as well as working to establish relationships with Highland and North Ayrshire councils, who also have islands within their council areas.

The local authority is already taking action to benefit our islands through the SOA key outcomes such as the provision of superfast broadband, increasing mobile phone coverage, developing links between different community projects, improving local peoples’ skills, the provision of affordable housing, regeneration initiatives such as the Townscape Heritage Initiative in Rothesay, improvements to airports and ferry terminals and supporting the SMILEGOV initiative.
