Dear Fiona,

The response from the Applicant to the question he has been asked is as follows.

“Over a five-year period, the Applicant spoke to the various case officers, and explained why he needed the building. He also emailed on several occasions, with information, and met case officers on site. He thought that would suffice, particularly as so much of his case related to the requirement to have a building for airfield uses on an operational airfield, which he thought case officers understood. It was only when the application was refused that it dawned on him that it wasn’t. Unfortunately, due to an IT issue, he doesn’t have his emails to the case officers, but assumes that the Planning Service will have those”.

We will be replying to the planning officer’s response next week.

Regards Paul
